

Glenda Dvorak, DVM, MS, MPH, DACVPM
Iowa State University Center for Food Security and Public Health

Assistant Director at the Iowa state University Center for Food Security and Public Health (CFSPH) where she researches and develops various educational programs and materials, and manages their respective grants and contracts. This has included being the driving force behind and co-editor of the book Zoonoses: Protecting People and Their Pets, which is basis for the One Health Commission Student Outreach Demonstration Project.

Dr. Dvorak received a BS in 1995 in zoology and an MS in 1997 in fisheries biology-aquaculture at Iowa State University. She received a DVM in 2001 at the ISU College of Veterinary Medicine and an MPH in 2003 at the University of Iowa. Dr. Dvorak received board certification as a Diplomate, American College of Veterinary Preventive Medicine in 2007.

Dr. Dvorak was in small animal practice in Iowa prior to joining the CFSPH in 2002 as an adjunct instructor. Currently, her teaching responsibilities include serving as an adjunct instructor for a course on Public Health Emergency Preparedness at the University of Iowa College of Public Health, and co-coordinator for the preparatory ACVPM Board Examination Review Course.