9. Brief History of Your Organization's One Health Involvement

The main scientific research programs of the Fondazione Edmund Mach are developed at the Research and Innovation Centre (CRI). In recent years, CRI has attained a solid reputation in agrifood and environmental research both nationally and internationally, as confirmed by the outstanding results of the recent national evaluation of scientific output led by the Agenzia Nazionale di Valutazione della Ricerca (ANVUR).

CRI focuses on three macro areas of interest: agriculture, food and environment. These sectors have been chosen as particularly strategic in the current socio-economic and climatic upheaval, which poses rising challenges for modest jurisdictions like Trentino. In order to sustain long-term growth in the bioeconomy, this alpine area must define a unique and recognizable identity, based on anticipatory and resilient socio-economic models that promote its natural capital, local products, and the general well-being that such traditional rural landscapes offer. Scientific research will help support the dynamic interactions between the generation of new scientific knowledge, and transformation of the results into practical applications, including the management of natural resources. This innovation supply chain, from science to practical applications, will secure the sustainability of production systems and the protection of human health and animal welfare, as well as the preservation of characteristic natural and agricultural environments. This interdependent and interdisciplinary approach explains why CRI is considered the first “OneHealth Centre” in Italy, typified by the motto “#trentinoterradellasalute”.
